Administrative History

The New York State Nautical School (later known as the State University of New York Maritime College) was founded in 1874 and administered by the Board of Education of the City of New York. During the period of 1874 to 1913, boys who were of grammar school-age and were able to prove that they resided or had a guardian who resided within the city limits of New York were granted admission to learn typical school subjects with the added plan of studying seamanship over an eighteen-month period. During this period, strong feelings of nationalism and xenophobia prevailed – particularly with regards to international trade, transportation, and naval forces – that promoted the admission of “American” boys to learn practical application for future careers in the maritime industry to a school such as the New York Nautical School.

Students would study similar courses as they would find in grammar schools – writing, reading, etc. – during the winter months, then complete the practical experience of summer cruise on board the converted sloop-of-war, SS St. Mary’s, to learn navigation, steering, sail-handling, etc. An engineering component was added with the transfer of the school to the sail-steam hybrid vessel SS Newport in 1907. The school was ultimately taken over by the State of New York in 1913 due to financial shortcomings and continued to exist as a school to prepare boys for service in the Merchant Marine.
Scope and Content Note

The scope of the Graduate Record Registry contains the records of boys who were admitted to and graduated from the New York Nautical School beginning in 1876 with the first graduating class until 1916 when registry information became contained by file folders instead. Each registry lists the student’s full name, entry number, date of admission, and date of graduation, as well as grades for overall school course, sail handling, steering, use of lead, activity aloft, navigation, deportment, palm and needle, and later practical seamanship, running lights, and engineering. Data includes information on the boys’ age at admission, height, weight, and chest measurement, hair color, and eye color. Some records also include transfer information for vessels, report of Master, and general remarks.

As the New York Nautical School’s mission was to prepare its students for a career in the maritime industry, the record of grammar school subjects was lesser priority and therefore not included in any of the records apart from an overall school course grade. As the years progressed, certain subjects were added (practical seamanship, running lights, engineering, steam engineering, and electrical), while others were considered less essential to the overall objectives of the training ship (deportment, palm and needle, transfer information). Grade point averages (GPAs) were introduced for the graduating class of 1899 for the subjects of overall school course and deportment, although were quickly discontinued by the early 20th century. There are inconsistent types of data between years at times, and even between students of the same year.

Due to the repair of the training vessel, St. Mary’s, and an outbreak of scarlet fever, there was no graduating class in 1893.
Arrangement Note

Each volume of the Graduate Record Registry has been individually addressed as a single series of the overall collection of Graduate Record Registries. Volumes are listed chronologically by year; within each volume, graduates have been listed at the item level to simplify reference.

Provenance Note

The collection of Graduate Record Registries has been kept within the authority and unbroken chain of custody for the New York Nautical School (today known as SUNY Maritime College) since the school’s foundation in 1874, and continues to be maintained by the Stephen B. Luce Library, Archives, and Special Collections today as part of the institutional archival materials.

Citation Note

Proper reference should be made by all researchers to the contents of these ledgers in accordance with the archive’s use policy. Citations to individual records and ledgers should be done so in the following manner:

[Student Name], [Ledger Title/Years], Box Number, Graduate Records Registries, Stephen B. Luce Library, Archives, and Special Collections. SUNY Maritime College, Bronx, NY 10465.
